OVERVIEW

The Conversa Table, part of the Una Mater collection, takes its name from the central sheet of reclaimed copper: a conversa, a roofing element designed to collect water where two roof slopes meet. Its marine plywood structure is clad in copper sheets marked by green, turquoise and reddish oxidation, crossed by a pattern reminiscent of a leaf or fishbone. A fold in the original sheet was flattened by hand, revealing the natural copper beneath. These unrepeatable traces make the table one of a kind.

CUSTOMIZATION

The Conversa Table can be made again on request, with dimensions and reclaimed copper sheets selected together with the artisan. The design can retain its original proportions or be adapted to suit the space. The oxidation patterns and markings of the newly selected sheets will give each version its own identity, without exactly replicating the photographed table.
